

Lemonade

(Value: Community)

Niki stood at her lemonade stand waiting for people to try some. She made it fresh at the stand in the blazing sun, her blonde hair heating up from its rays. She had already made £2 today since she had gotten four customers and each cup of lemonade was 50p.

Suddenly, Niki heard people down the road raising their voices, so she went to check it out. "What are you doing?" she asked loudly, looking at the two boys who seemed to be pointing and laughing. They just ignored her. This time Niki said it sternly, "What are you guys doing?"

When she looked at what they were pointing at, she saw a group of what looked like homeless people. "Tramps!" the two boys yelled. "What's that smell?" they sneered. Niki realised that she probably shouldn't argue with them since they were taller than her, and there were two of them and only one of her so she just went back to her stand.

5 minutes later, the boys strutted down towards her stand, smirking. "Give me a lemonade," the tallest one said, "no." Niki very calmly said, "No, I don't think I will. I heard what you said to them people."

There was a silence... CRASH - the boys lunged at her behind her stand, their fists swinging in the air. "Hey!" Niki heard a voice shout loudly. When she opened her eyes she saw them horrible boys being dragged away by two men, and when she looked at the men's faces she realised that they were the men that were hopeless who she stood up for. "Get off of me now," the two boys yelled, "I'm sorry!" they called out to Niki.

She couldn't believe it, they just saved her from those boys. In fact, Niki was so shocked she nearly didn't notice the men walking back towards her. "Thank you so much!" they all said simultaneously. Niki smiled, "Here," she said, passing them both large cups of lemonade, "you probably need this."

So they all gulped down their drinks, proud that they had stuck up for what they thought was right.
